How To File an Appeal

Welcome to THE CITY OF HUNTINGTON BEACH

Huntington Beach Zoning and Subdivision Ordinance, Chapter 248, stipulates that a decision on a discretionary approval is not final until the time for an appeal expires. The time for an appeal from a decision by the Director of Planning, Zoning Administrator, Environmental Assessment Committee, Design Review Board, Subdivision Committee or the Planning Commission shall be filed within ten calendar days after the date of the decision.

The Planning Commission shall hear an appeal from the decision of the Director of Planning, Zoning Administrator, Design Review Board, Environmental Assessment Committee, and the Subdivision Committee. The City Council shall hear an appeal from the decision of the Planning Commission. City Council decisions are final except for Coastal Development Permits located in the appealable area of the coastal zone.

What To Do

1. During the appeal period, an aggrieved party files letter stating the reasons for said appeal with the Planning Department or the City Clerk's office, depending upon whose decision is being appealed. Appropriate filing fee is also paid at this time.
2. The Planning Department schedules the item before the appropriate body. The reviewing body shall hear the appeal as a new matter.
3. Public notification is sent and published in newspaper.
4. Appropriate body (Planning Commission or City Council) holds public hearing. Staff presents the report, appellant and other interested parties give testimony. Planning Commission or City Council considers all information presented and renders a decision.

5. Appellant is notified of decision. Decisions of the Planning Commission are final unless appealed to the City Council.
6. Decisions of the City Council are final, except that coastal development permits for development located in the appealable area of the coastal zone may be appealed to the California Coastal Commission.
