HBReads Selects Conor Grennan's Little Princes For 2016 Book Campaign

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif., Sept. 24, 2015 – The non-profit community reading club, Huntington Beach Reads One Book, or HBReads, today announced its annual campaign to promote diversity through literature will center on author Conor Grennan's Little Princes.

The New York Times bestseller is based on the inspirational true story of Grennan's obsession to reunite stolen children of Nepal with their real families. Finding himself in the middle of the human trafficking turmoil, his memoir is gripping and carries us deep into an exotic world that most readers know little about.

"If you've never believed in miracles," said a Christian Science Monitor critic, "this book could convince you otherwise. Like the children he writes about, Grennan has boundless resilience and determination, in addition to self-effacing humor and tunnel-vision devotion. He's also a good writer..."

The campaign, which will culminate in March with personal appearances by Grennan March 17th at the Huntington Beach Central Library and March 18th at Edison High School, will include special events throughout local secondary schools, libraries and book stores.

Now in its ninth year, HBReads has consistently promoted quality books and authors to the Huntington Beach community. Previous campaigns have focused on such timely topics as bullying, autism, discrimination and other social issues.
